NASDAQ internal employee communication

From: Bob Greifeld
To: NASDAQ staff
Subject: NASDAQ and OMX to Combine

Dear Colleagues,

I am very pleased to tell you that NASDAQ, together with OMX, a leading global provider of exchange technology services, have agreed to combine into a single company. The combination will be called The NASDAQ OMX Group, Inc., and together we will create the largest global network of exchanges and exchange customers linked by technology.

NASDAQ and OMX are both driven by innovation and competition, and the new company will provide significant benefits for the customers, shareholders and other stakeholders of both companies.

The terms of the offer is a mixture of cash and stock with NASDAQ shareholders owning approximately 70% of the shares and OMX owning the remaining 30%. Full details of the offer can be found in the press release that we issued today.

I am excited about this opportunity, which will create a new competitor in the exchange space. The combination will be a world technology leader and will expand across asset classes and provide a technology presence across 50 countries worldwide. We share a common competitive heritage with the employees of OMX, and I know that we will enjoy working closely with them.

The combined group will have approximately 2,349 employees in 22 countries. The NASDAQ OMX Group, Inc. headquarters will be located in New York, which will serve as the center of operations for the group's U.S. cash trading business. The combined group's pan-European, international and derivatives activities will be located in London. Stockholm will be the center of operations for the group's Nordic cash activities and technology operations.

This transaction truly represents the intersection of global technology and exchange operation and exemplifies the pioneering vision that NASDAQ has carried forward since its inception.
